

SOUTH BIRMINGHAM COLLEGE SCOOPS PRESTIGIOUS QUALITY KITEMARK

South Birmingham College has been recognised as one of the best training providers in the country by a government body.

The College, which has campuses in Digbeth, Bordesley Green and Hall Green, has been awarded the Training Quality Standard (TQS), a kitemark awarded by the Learning and Skills Council.

The TQS is designed to recognise and celebrate the best organisations that provide high quality responsive training for employers.

South Birmingham College was particularly lauded for its expertise in the areas of social care, childcare and construction and is one of only a handful of training providers to have achieved excellence in three or more sector areas.

Paul Morris, the Assistant Principal responsible for business development, is thrilled that the work of the college has been endorsed by such an important and stringent quality assessment framework as the TQS.

He said: "It's a great feeling to know that the hard work and dedication of College staff has been recognised and celebrated in this way.

"We are very proud to have achieved the quality kitemark, which endorses the excellent services we provide to businesses throughout Birmingham, Solihull and the West Midlands region."

The TQS is rigorously assessed by an independent body and takes into account many aspects of the services the College provides, including feedback from employers who currently work with the College and have taken advantage of the training and business support services on offer.

Paul Morris added: "The key to our success is the time we invest with our clients, to understand and identify their business needs. We then develop and deliver bespoke training solutions, at times to suit the business operations. We also ensure our training fully achieves agreed business outcomes and has a positive impact on business performance."
